Why hackers want your computer

“I don’t bank online, I don’t store sensitive information on my machine! I only use it to check email. What could hackers possibly want with this hunk of junk?”

... nearly every aspect of a hacked computer and a user's online life can be and has been commoditized (sold). ... This guy makes and markets dozens of account checking tools that are used to test the validity and status of many popular online stores and services, including Amazon, American Express, eBay, Facebook, iTunes, PayPal and Skype, to name a few.

Data breach exposes 1.6 million Washington state unemployment claims

An unauthorized person was able to exploit a software vulnerability in Accellion's file transfer service... With Accellion being a popular service used by numerous organizations, we should expect to see more hacks come to light.

Data includes name, social security number and/or driver's license or state identification number, bank account number and bank routing number, and place of employment.

Thousands of US lab results and medical records spilled online after a security lapse

NTreatment, a technology company that manages electronic health and patient records for doctors and psychiatrists, left thousands of sensitive health records exposed to the internet because one of its cloud servers wasn't protected with a password.

A billion medical images are exposed online, as doctors ignore warnings

PACS servers, used to store medical images allow for easy storage and sharing. Many medical offices connect their PACS server directly to the internet without a password.

Torian Group

This is a repeat of information sent out last month just in case you missed it.

Torian Group is upgrading the software used to monitor and maintain your computers. You may see new icons as a result of these changes.

Currently, your taskbar shows the following Icon (it may be hidden depending on your settings):

There will now be up to 3 new icons, which look like this:

-  Bitdefender GravityZone Is replacing the Endpoint Security Console icon (anti-malware)
-  Torian Group Monitoring Service (for monitoring and maintenance)
-  ConnectWise Control icon (for remote access)

More information on Solarwinds

As you may have seen on the news, the Solarwinds Orion software was hacked. Torian Group does not use the Solarwinds Orion product, and your network is not affected. We have been assured by SolarWinds executives during multiple online meetings that there is no link between the product that was hacked (SolarWinds Orion) and the product we have been using for monitoring and maintenance (SolarWinds N-Central). However, to err on the side of caution, we are replacing the SolarWinds N-Central product with a product from ConnectWise Automate. We are also upgrading to a more capable anti-malware product called GravityZone by Bitdefender which includes “endpoint detection & response”. The Bitdefender, ConnectWise Control, and Torian Group Monitoring Service icons are part of the upgrade.

If you or your staff currently use the system for remote access to your office computers, we will contact you with instructions for using the new web portal. This will not affect any VPN connections you have.

If you don't have remote worker access to your computer and would like to, please contact us. There are no additional charges for this service.

There is no cost for the upgrade process, and it will happen automatically. Separately, the monthly cost for the agent went up from $5 to $6 starting January 1, 2021.

Here is a detailed technical analysis of the hack, and the analysis by the Cybersecurity agency (CISA) and a list of affected Solarwinds products.

Here is the notification from SolarWinds.
